Writer's block is a serious problem for many writers because it can make it impossible for a person to write anything at all or not produce work at their normal pace. This article is going to go over what writer's block is, how it can be overcome, and what you should do if you have been suffering from it lately. Here are some tips to overcome writer's block. Tip #1- Change your environment If you have been sitting in the same place for hours trying to write but nothing is coming, try something different. Go outside for a walk, maybe set up outside and do some writing there if possible. Doing something different may give you new ideas or inspire you to keep writing. The opposite of writer's block is inspiration, so try to find new things that may inspire you to write more. Tip #2- Read something I don't mean read your own work, but just anything. It does not matter what it is. Reading something will help you understand the potential of language and help you connect with words more easily instead of feeling like they are an impossible obstacle to overcome. This will also help you become a better writer so that the next time writer's block comes around you can write an essay, short story, or even a novel! Tip #3- Use your downtime If you are bored for five minutes, try writing about it. See if anything interesting happens during then or if there is something funny that can come out of that little moment of boredom. Tip #4- Surround yourself with people who support your creativity If you are in the same place you always are, surrounded by the same people, then chances are you will not feel inspired to write. Try to surround yourself with positive people who support your creativity. They will make it easier to get out of your writer's block because they will force you to do it! Tip #5- Take a break It is important to take breaks when writing. It is very easy for us writers to get stuck in rapt attention. Take a break from your work, take a break from the house. Take a long walk and enjoy the fresh air, maybe go listen to some music. Give your mind some time to relax so it is not as hyper focused on writing as it has been. Then later when you come back you will have a more relaxed mind that will be easier to come up with ideas for what you have been working on. Tip #6- Reference other cultures This step is very important because almost every culture has a story of some kind that could help inspire your own creativity. Reading about other cultures stories and myths can help give new ideas for your own stories and will also improve your appreciation of language and how words can be used in stories.
